

Production details for Spy vs. Spy (2006)

Spy vs. Spy is the product of an impromptu video assignment one day in my Digital Video I class. We had approximately one hour to come up with a storyline and shoot our footage. We were in groups of three, so one person would direct and shoot the footage and the other two people were to assist the director and act for the shots. Scott Seago was the director of this piece and Lindsay Moe and I were the 'talent.' After we got our footage, all three of us were expected to edit together our own version of the plot using the footage captured. This movie happens to be my version of Spy vs. Spy.

To better improve the feeling of the short movie, I used a clip of audio from the movie The Untouchables entitled Waiting at the Border (that best accented the actions of the characters in the video) and applied it to my time line.
